Day 3!

“We’re Crossing Over to the Promised Land”

Inspirations of Brene Brown, thingsilearnt (wordpress.com), Dr. Mulkar

Rev. Karen Hagen

✧ A Moment of Personal Reflection

✧ Opening Ourselves to God’s Grace

✧ Sharing Our Inner Most Lives with God based on today’s Wisdom Teachings & Theme

Lord God, I wish I had a “holy ark” to follow so I would know the way to go...because like the Hebrew people, I have not passed this way before.

You gave them just enough space so they could follow comfortably and still see you. This is exactly what I need, too!

The waters parted for them again. Part them again for me Lord...at times, feels like I’m drowning here.

They rested their feet in the Jordan. Lord, rest my feet. I’m so tired.

They picked stones to take to the other side as a memorial to Your faithfulness and their journey. Oh Lord! I’m carrying around a lot of stones! If these stone I carry could only speak, they would name my burdens and questions and doubts. I have come a long way, stones and all...sometimes it’s just hard to keep on going.

Help me cross over to another point of view. Help me glean the wisdom of my life's stones. Give me the energy to follow the best I can...as a new person in a new promised land...re-formed.

Lord, I ask it.

✧ You may wish to name with God how you feel lost even as you strive to follow; or you may share with God a stone you carry...perhaps one that has been lifted from you; or you may simply invite Jesus to come sit beside you shining healing light all around and through you.

✧ To Deepen Our Reflection (Excerpt from BODY AND SOUL, Coleman Hawkins)

I used to think the power of words was inexhaustible...that how we "said" the world was how it was, and how it would be. I used to imagine that word-sway and word-thunder would silence "the Silence"...that "worlds" were the Word...that language could lead us inexplicably to grace, as though it were geographical. I used to think these things when I was young. I still do.

✧ Benediction...Becoming a Living Blessing

*What goes with you as life giving from our shared time? What is helpful?
Do you have a new idea to ponder? Do you have a better question to be asking?*

✧ Our Response

Holy One, now we your servants go in peace. Your word lives on in us.
